HY 406 Southern Memories: Lynchin in Alabama

The victims of lynching died twice: once when they were murdered and again when their memories were lost in history. Now, students are working to regain those memories.

For the last three years, UA students recover the many lives lost to lynching in the state of Alabama.

The class investigates and promotes understanding of the history and culture through facilitated exploration of the southern past, present and future.

No murder was meant to be investigated... No victim expected to be remembered.

Rewrite the untold stories of history of racial violence across Alabama and the South.

There are over 350 recorded victims. Join the effort to recover their lives.
