Robert May was born in 1926, the youngest of three boys. For several generations, his family owned a dry goods store. A small synagogue served 12-15 Jewish families in his community, and his father served as unofficial cantor.

Then in 1933, Hitler came to power and antisemitism exploded. Der Stürmer, the antisemitic Nazi tabloid, was prominently displayed about town. The neighborhood grocer would no longer sell to the family. Classmates joined the Hitler Youth, and fear became part of daily life.

May’s story as a Holocaust survivor will be shared by his daughter, Ann Mollengarden.
